Katie & Andy

Erin.

Wow. To say that Saturday was special would be an understatement. Everything was great, We had the food, the venue, the friends and family. All of these things were risks, would the weather hold? Would the food be as good as at the tasting, would everyone be able to make it? But from the day we saw your work there was no question or concern. We thought we knew what we were getting but, "wow", That word silently passed my lips when I saw the first picture on face book. I want it on record, WOW. I am speechless. I never realized how beautiful it could all look, I am so glad you brought your talented eye to our wedding to see the beauty and love that we knew was there. There isn't another person alive that could have done it better or even come close. We are so happy with the photos, we are busting with joy! These words are as genuine as the tears in my eyes as I write them (didn't cry on the day, seriously crying now) Thank you doesn't say it, I don't know of a word that can say it. -

{That was from Andy.}

I agree with everything he said, and just wanted to add it that you were such a wonderful addition to our day. You definitely felt like an honorary bridesmaid! And I don't think we ever told you how we found you. We went with Andy's parents and sister the Christmas before last to Hawaii where Andy proposed in the ferry terminal (he was going to propose in Hawaii but got too excited). On our way back we rushed from the airport to the ferry terminal, only to find out we had a six hour wait for the first ferry. Since we were newly engaged, I decided to do some wedding research, and I came across your blog and fell in love with your pictures. You were the first thing about the wedding we decided on.

Thanks again for everything.
